Call to ACT
The Maternal Mental Health Alliance’s Everyone’s Business campaign is calling for all women throughout the UK with perinatal mental health conditions to receive the treatment they need, where and when they need it, as outlined in numerous national guidelines.

Take Action

Urgent action needed for women and families in Northern Ireland

By Shona Hamilton, Perinatal Mental Health Lead for the Royal College of Midwives, Northern Ireland

I have spent ten years campaigning for better perinatal mental health services in Northern Ireland but, despite the rhetoric, women and families are still being let down by the lack of appropriate care. The Everyone’s Business Campaign has long highlighted the alarming gaps in specialist care for perinatal mental health in Northern Ireland. There is no specialist inpatient mother and baby unit (MBU) in Northern Ireland (in fact there are no MBUs on the whole island of Ireland) and only a single specialist perinatal mental health service located in Belfast.

Minimal progress has been made. Despite recommendations made earlier this year by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA), action has been scarce. The absence of a devolved government risks delaying vital decisions and prolonging a situation where women are simply unable to access the care and support they need.

Evidence points to investment as key to improving services and turning the map green. Health professionals recognise the need for specialist services and a perinatal mental health pathway has been developed in Northern Ireland; tragically, without resources on the ground and investment from government, women and families will continue to be at risk.

Campaign update: Call to Act NOW

In the first phase of the Campaign the focus was on the Call to ACT (Accountability, Community and Training) to help end the postcode lottery for women trying to access specialist perinatal mental health services. Together we have made significant progress towards our goals thanks to the combined efforts of MMHA members and other supporters. But there is still work to be done.

There is now a precious window of opportunity to make a difference for women and families. Your continued support is needed to focus our collective efforts on three priorities NOW and help turn the map green.

New funds announced for specialist community multi-disciplinary perinatal mental health services must not be wasted, absorbed elsewhere or misspent – they should deliver well-planned and coordinated services in England and Wales.

Outstanding areas of need must be funded in Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales.

Women and families must have access to specialist multi-disciplinary perinatal mental health services as part of an integrated pathway of care.

The Campaign will be using the Call to Act NOW to plan its work over the coming months.

Please share with us your ideas for joint working and any reports or activities you have planned which we may be able to support.

In addition, please consider using the Call to Act NOW in your work.

Progress made

Progress is being made towards achieving the aims of the Call to ACT and this year we have seen some fantastic developments in perinatal mental health.

These include:
- £40m allocated for specialist perinatal mental health services by NHS England in Wave 1 with a further £20m being allocated in Wave 2
- The development of a Scottish Managed Clinical Network for perinatal mental health
- All seven Health Boards in Wales have received additional dedicated funding for specialist perinatal mental health services
- New Mother and Baby Unit (MBU) beds announced in England

Thank you for your hard work this year. 2018 will be a vital chance to ensure the precious opportunity to turn the map green is not lost. We look forward to working together with you to achieve change for women and their families.

Has your local area received Wave 1 funding for specialist services?

Check out the Campaign’s regional dotted maps to find out. The maps highlight the four NHS England regions, showing where dedicated funding has been allocated for specialist perinatal mental health services and where action is still needed to turn the map green.

Let’s turn the map green

The bid process for Wave 2 funding for specialist services is expected soon

Why specialist services?

View from a National Mental Health Director

“Specialist perinatal mental health services are a vital component of a modern health system. Such services touch lives in ways that transform early years development and help mother, baby and indeed partners to cope with serious mental health problems at a precious and vulnerable time. Evidence-based treatments, expertise and care are provided by perinatal mental health specialists who also recognise the important role of midwives, health visitors, GPs, obstetricians and other health professionals.”

View from an Expert by Experience

“In my first pregnancy, OCD led to all-consuming terror and to feeling like I couldn’t go on. I told 11 different professionals. I felt desperate, exhausted and invisible. In my second pregnancy I received coordinated services: medication, supportive frequent visits from specialist perinatal mental health staff and talking therapies. Completely life-changing for our family.”

Ministerial Roundtable

On 4th December the Campaign hosted a Ministerial Roundtable with Jackie Doyle-Price, Minister for Care and Mental Health. The roundtable is key for the MMHA as we bring together national stakeholders to discuss the state of perinatal mental health and gain commitments to keep moving towards improvements. These new commitments will be published soon.

Minister for Care and Mental Health, Jackie Doyle-Price, made her first visit to a Mother and Baby Unit last month.

“I thoroughly enjoyed my recent visit to the Rainbow Mother and Baby Unit in Chelmsford and getting to speak to the very engaged and passionate staff there. I was pleased to tour the unit and see first-hand the great care that the patients were receiving.”

Saving Lives, Improving Mothers’ Care

This report highlighted that maternal suicide is the third largest cause of direct maternal death in the first few weeks, and is the leading cause of death when looked at over a year. 1 in 9 women who die during pregnancy or up to one year after pregnancy die by suicide. High quality care and support for perinatal mental health is desperately needed for these women to prevent deaths and identify women at risk as early as possible. Let’s turn the map green and save lives.

Wales

New MBU recommended for Wales

A recent report from a National Assembly for Wales committee included a series of recommendations to improve perinatal mental health care across Wales, including the re-opening of a Mother and Baby Unit. The additional funding pledged (£7.5 million in total, £1.5m per year over 5 years) for specialist community services in Wales is a significant step forward but more investment is required to bring services in-line with national quality standards.

Key recommendations
- Re-establishing a Mother and Baby Unit in Wales
- Establishing a Managed Clinical Network
- Working with relevant bodies to ensure that perinatal mental health is included in training for health professionals
- Undertaking a public awareness campaign

MMHA Chair, Alain Gregoire, sent a letter in response to the report, welcoming its publication and encouraging action on the recommendations to help turn the map green in Wales.

Scotland

Steps are gradually being made towards better perinatal mental health services in Scotland:
- The Minister for Child Care and Early Years, Maree Todd, has agreed to take forward a motion in Parliament to introduce the Everyone’s Business Campaign to parliamentarians
- Campaign present within Scottish Government Mental Health Strategy (2017-27) reference group
- Meeting scheduled with Scottish Government Principal Medical Officer

Mental health championed at Buckingham Palace

On World Mental Health Day, 10th October, Campaign Director Emily Slater was invited to a Buckingham Palace reception hosted by the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and Prince Harry, acknowledging the contributions of all of us working tirelessly in the UK mental health sector.

Emily said: “Stephen Fry summed up – for me – the atmosphere and significance of the event (to paraphrase): ‘Whatever your politics, having a mental health event being held in this building [Buckingham Palace] is huge cause for celebration – for mental health to be being discussed and championed by the Royal Highnesses helps to bring mental health into the light.’”

Comic Relief hosts event for maternal mental health grantees

Thank you to our funder Comic Relief for hosting a stimulating event in September for organisations in receipt of grant money for maternal mental health.

The Everyone’s Business team shared an update on the national context for perinatal mental health and learnt more about the crucial work of local perinatal mental health charities and organisations across the UK. Success comes when we all work together to ensure woman and families have access to high quality services right across the care pathway.

Fingertips tool

Public Health England has launched an interactive web platform, the Fingertips tool, providing data across a range of health and wellbeing themes. The Perinatal Mental Health profile is part of this tool and provides easy access to perinatal mental health related data in thematic profiles.

It aims to:

• Support perinatal mental health care planning and commissioning in local areas
• Help ensure women who become unwell get the right help, in the right place, at the right time
• Plan workforce needs
